House Panel Opposes AWACS Sale as Some Senators Alter Stands

WASHINGTON — The House Foreign Affairs Committee dealt President Reagan his first congressional setback on the AWACS sale Wednesday, voting 28-8 against the proposed $8.5-billion arms sale to Saudi Arabia.

they would now support the package. Both houses of Congress must reject the proposal to block the sale. The House will vote, most likely to oppose the deal, next Tuesday. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee is also expected to act on the issue next week.

Third World Dominates Commonwealth Text

By Henry Kamm New York Times Service MELBOURNE — The Commonwealth, showing the continuing rise of non-Western or anti-Western sentiments among its membership of 45 nations once governed by Britain, ended its summit Wednesday with a long communiqué reflecting the views of its majority of Third World members.

To have tried to introduce the event into the text, a high Commonwealth secretary official said, would have meant reopening a difficult debate in which more extremist members might have insisted on controversial phrases.

The communiqué centered its longest sections on South Africa and the demands of the developing countries upon the industrialized world. It condemned the Pretoria regime for "its brutal internal repression of the African majority" and its military actions against neighboring states.

The long section on the developing nations' claims against the rich countries contained many allusions to their concern about what is thought to be Mr. Reagan's unsympathetic attitude to their demands.

Among the Democrats supporting the deal was committee Chairman Clement J. Zablocki of Wisconsin, who said he believed that "this sale enhances the defense of Saudi Arabia... and will complement our foreign policy in the Middle East."

Sen. Danforth said he still opposed the sale, but he added that he believed Mr. Reagan had changed some minds. At least two senators — Alan K. Simpson of Wyoming, who was a co-sponsor of a Senate resolution disapproving the sale, and John W. Warner of Virginia — reversed their positions and aligned themselves with the president.

MPs in Social Democrats Rise to 21 As 2 More U.K. Laborites Defect

BRADFORD, England — Britain's new Social Democratic Party gained the defection of two more Labor members of Parliament, one of them a political adviser to James Callaghan when he was prime minister.

The MPs, Thomas McNally and James Dunn, were cheered and applauded by 1,000 Social Democrats when they appeared on the platform at the SDP's first annual conference here to announce their decisions.

Protestants In Ulster Bar Jail Reforms

BELFAST — The Rev. Ian Paisley and other militant Protestant leaders warned the British government Wednesday that its prison reforms aimed at defusing protests by Republican nationalist prisoners will be met with "confrontation and the utmost resistance."

The British foreign secretary, Lord Carrington, tried to persuade African heads of government not to make the group's work more difficult with criticism about President Reagan's rapprochement with South Africa.

U.S. Senate Panel Narrows Bill On Identifying Spies Overseas

WASHINGTON — By a single vote, the Senate Judiciary Committee has agreed to narrow the scope of a House-passed bill making it a crime to identify U.S. intelligence operatives working undercover overseas.

passed by the House last month, was so broad that opponents feared it could have led to prosecutions of reporters involved in such news reports as the CIA connections of some of the Watergate burglars.

Unesco Aide Says Press Plan Aims To Aid News Flow

NEW YORK — A Unesco official has defended his organization's program for a "new world information order," saying that the plan was aimed at encouraging the free flow of news and ideas in developing nations and not restricting press freedom.

On Tuesday, White House communications director David R. Georges said the killing of Mr. Sadat — with the certainty it may create in the Middle East — "in no way lessens the urgency, the necessity of the sale. Indeed, it only increases that urgency."

The new arrivals raised the Social Democrats' strength in Parliament to 21, all but one of them former Labor Party members. Four Labor MPs have defected in the last three days.

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau has invited Canada's 10 provincial premiers to Ottawa for a last attempt to reach a national consensus on constitutional reform.

Mr. Trudeau, who is in Melbourne for a Commonwealth conference, met with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher on Monday and obtained her written agreement to put the proposals through the next session of the British Parliament.

Mr. Trudeau said he was disappointed that there was no overall provincial agreement. He also pledged limited "free association" within the wings of the protest, and some exemption from penal work.

But Mrs. Thatcher withheld any formal assurance of passage, and Lord Carrington, the British foreign secretary, emphasized the difficulty of passing a bill that did not have overall provincial agreement.

SIMONE DE BEAUVOIR
A Life of Freedom
By Carol Ascher. 234 pp. $15.
Beacon Press, 25 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.

Reviewed by Angeline Goreau

CERTAIN books leave one with the impression of having written themselves somewhere in the course of investigation...

ism, now practically over, and perhaps we should say no more about it. The uncomfortable immediacy of these liminal sentences, written in 1948, makes a re-evaluation of Simone de Beauvoir's life, work and influence a particularly interesting project to undertake at a time when many assumptions and rights gained by the "new" feminists are being questioned or attacked.

Carol Ascher's "Simone de Beauvoir: A Life of Freedom" gives us an account of the forces of circumstance that brought de Beauvoir to the conclusions of "The Second Sex." When, at the age of 38, she began work on what was to be her most famous book, she had not in the least considered herself a feminist. In fact, up until that time she had firmly believed that the fact of her sex made little difference to her life: "I did not deny my femininity, I simply ignored it. I had the same freedoms and responsibilities as men did."

Such a reexamination involves an enormous challenge: Simone de Beauvoir has left a dazzlingly articulate and detailed record of her very earliest impressions, sentimental education, intellectual development and daily experience. For more than 50 years of constant literary activity, she habitually reconsidered, refined, framed objective distance. The writer who takes her on must either add significant new information or provide an original point of view. Carol Ascher claims to have done the latter in the form of what she calls a "personal" narrative that is neither "a biography, a philosophical critique, or a work of literary criticism."

Converted to Feminism
The idea of writing about what it had meant to her to be a woman came to de Beauvoir when, inspired by Michel Leiris' autobiographical essay "Masculinity," she formed the project of writing her own memoirs. "Wanting to think about myself," she later explained, "I became aware that to do so I should first have to describe the condition of women in general." In so doing, Simone de Beauvoir converted herself to feminism and laid the foundation for a "new wave" of thinking and writing about women. Echoing other feminists of the second generation, Juliet Mitchell, in her "Psychoanalysis and Feminism," acknowledged "The Second Sex" as "the baseline from which other works either explicitly... or implicitly (in that all feminist writers must have read it) take off." As Carol Ascher quite correctly points out, examination of that debt provides a number of useful insights into the evolution of the women's movement since 1960.

When Ascher does permit herself the objectivity of biographical, philosophical or literary discourse, she produces some interesting observations, but the rest of the book suffers from an over-literal interpretation of the idea that "the personal is political." The startling subjectivity that seemed so fresh when it first appeared in earlier feminist writings is here reduced to an insistent insertion of self that only serves to undermine the text. In an imaginary letter to Simone de Beauvoir that Ascher has dropped into the middle of the book, the author confesses to her subject: "Often in the morning as I go to my desk, I feel resentful, begrudging, sick of the lack of reciprocity between us... I must tell you that the novel on which I spent three years has not found a publisher, and the past months while I have worked on 'your book' (that's actually how I sometimes think of it) have been punctuated by periodic rejection slips for my novel. So at moments, I have felt a rancor whose expression is: Why should I be devoting myself to you when you never did anything for me?"

That Simone de Beauvoir should have had to write a theoretical tract on women in order to find out that her sex, had, after all, been a determining factor in her existence is ironic testimony to the isolation in which she worked. On rereading the first lines of "The Second Sex," I noticed a further historical irony: "For a long time I have hesitated to write a book on women," it begins. "The subject is irritating, especially to women; and it is not new. Enough ink has been spilled in the quarreling over feminism, now practically over, and perhaps we should say no more about it. The uncomfortable immediacy of these liminal sentences, written in 1948, makes a re-evaluation of Simone de Beauvoir's life, work and influence a particularly interesting project to undertake at a time when many assumptions and rights gained by the "new" feminists are being questioned or attacked.

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott

IN many sports and recreations there is an advantage in playing on one's home turf in front of one's own supporters. In bridge, however, the opposite appears to be true: The home team tends to play below its ability. This may be a matter of being able or unable to give full attention to the play. In a foreign country the would-be champion can escape almost entirely family, friends and business.

It was possible to clinch the victory. They had much the worst of play against the Irish, however, and needed a big pick-up on the very last deal, shown in the diagram.

This tendency, combined with the formidable nature of the opposition, weighted the scales heavily against the Dutch teams in a tournament in Amsterdam. The field of 88 teams, many of them sponsored by commercial organizations, came from all parts of Europe and includes the Swedes who won the 1977 European title, the Italians who did likewise in 1979 and some of Poles who won the Rees-Blum Trophy, a world event, in 1978. There were also French and Danish teams loaded with international stars.

One method with a great deal to recommend it is for responder to bid two clubs directly with exactly four clubs and at least one other four-card suit. Other hands with two or three four-card suits redouble and then move to the cheapest suit. Five-card or longer suits, other than clubs, are bid immediately, so a direct two diamonds would be the correct two of the South hand.

BRIDGE hand diagram showing North and South hands and a bidding sequence.

The final double was a penalty suggestion rather than a command. Mas as West was happy to pass and led the heart ten. Dummy played low, and when East won with the queen, preparing for his own ruff. Dummy won with the club king, and a trump was led to the queen. When this lost to the ace and a club was returned South misguessed by putting up the ace. East ruffed and reverted to hearts, allowing his partner to ruff the third round of the suit, cash the club jack and lead a spade. There was no way to avoid the loss of two more tricks, for if South tried to throw his spade loser on the heart jack, North could ruff with the diamond nine.

This added up to an 800 penalty and a gain of 12 international match points for the Dutch. This was just enough to give them the top honors. They finished exactly one victory point ahead of another Dutch quartet, bringing a little glory to their sponsor. Berdy, a suede fashion-wear house.

Art Buchwald Hole in the Safety Net

WASHINGTON — The budget cutters were working late into the night in the Office of Management and Budget. As they sat around the table, weary from lack of sleep, one of them said: "That's it, Dave, we can't find one more thing to cut."

"I can't tell that to the boss. There must be something else we've overlooked."

"I have an idea, Dave. Though I hate to suggest it."

"Go ahead. It won't leave this room."

"What about the safety net?"

"I'm not following you."

"If we took away the safety net we could save $10 billion."

"But the president promised he'd provide a safety net for the truly needy. If he took it away he'd look as if he was reneging on his word."

"We don't have to tell anyone we've removed the safety net. It will be our dirty little secret."

"But if there is no safety net and someone walking on the tightrope falls, he or she will hit the pavement with a thud."

"It's done in circuses all the time. I've never seen anyone fall off."

"Yeah, but in a circus the people walking the tightrope are all in condition. The ones we're providing the safety net for are old and sick and have no shoes."

"Look, Dave, when the president talked about a safety net for the elderly, the really poor and the really sick, he was talking about one of reasonable size."

"If we go into the recession before our supply-side economics bear fruit, we're going to need a safety net bigger than the city of Detroit. And even if the poor people fall into it, there is no guarantee that they're still going to be badly hurt. Our original figures indicated our safety net could take care of all the people who are on a tightrope now. But we didn't take into account the ones who are going to be walking on it after all our budget cuts go into effect."

"He's right, Dave. Also you have to remember, in our last cuts, we made the tightrope a lot thinner and weaker to save money. It's not going to be able to hold all the new people we're putting on it."

"I promised the boss the safety net would be the last thing we'd cut. Don't forget we're not only talking about people walking on a tightrope. We're also talking about those who are going to start jumping out of windows."

"You're all heart, Dave. But if the president goes on television and explains to the American people that this country can't afford a safety net until it gets its economic house in order, they'll go along with him."

Richard Leakey On Anthropological Controversies: 'A Lot of These Things We'll Never Know'

By Mary Anne Fitzgerald

International Herald Tribune NAIROBI — Richard Leakey is indulging in a cynical appraisal of his profession as he pilots his tan and white Cessna northward to the arid shores of Lake Turkana in Kenya. The 450-mile trip is taking him to his spiritual home at Koobi Fora, where a treasure trove of Pliocene and Pleistocene fossils and tools has been the springboard for his meteoric rise in paleontology.

At 38, Leakey has turned the anthropological world upside down by tracing man's emergence as a recognizable human being to 2 million years ago. But something is bothering him. "So little is known about this science," he said of the study of early man, "if it's open to discovery then it would be well worth getting excited about, but a lot of these things we'll never know."

The issue centers on volcanic ash called KBS tuff. The tuff's age was published as 2.6 million years, give or take a quarter of a million, in 1970. It turned out that this was incorrect. No one might have paid attention if a Kenyan called Bernard Ngeno had not stumbled across a tiny fragment of bone lying in a nearby gully in 1972. More than 300 fragments of a braincase were sifted from the sand, and the skull, when reconstructed, has a large brain of 775 cubic centimeters, the earliest concrete evidence of the evolution of man through an increase in his brain size. Because it was found in sediment below the KBS tuff, it seemed to mean that 1470 was nearly 3 million years old. Leakey was soon challenged on the date, and tests concluded that the tuff was 1.8 million years old.

Wonder Woman, Philanthropist

NEW YORK — "She was the only superhero that existed for little girls," Gloria Steinem says of Wonder Woman, the comic book character who turned 40 this week.

Wonder Woman has added philanthropy to her powers. A Wonder Woman Foundation to promote the idea of women as people of achievement was announced Tuesday by DC Comics Publisher Jenette Kahn.

Actress Maureen Stapleton, a board member, was joined by singer Lucy Collins and Steinem, publisher of Ms. magazine, to inaugurate the group. Backed by $100,000 from Warner Communications, DC Comics' parent company, the foundation will award educational grants to women "far less visible" than Wonder Woman, Kahn said.

Financial Support "Traditionally sites have been worked for 30 or 40 years by small groups," he explained. "Koobi Fora is spectacular. It attracted a lot of support. We had a lot of money and were able to bring in large numbers of people who we could deal with things expeditiously." Koobi Fora and another site in the Omo Valley together cost $1.5 million.

One Koobi Fora skull in particular, known by its index fossil, is the subject of a book by Leakey and others, demonstrating that a hominid being with a relatively high level of intelligence lived on earth 2 million years ago. Leakey himself achieved an instant popularity among laymen through a canny instinct for utilizing the media (journalists) and his concentration on that fascinating mystery, how modern hominids evolved from an apelike creature.

Leakey believes the site has been sacked dry of its secrets. "New data will improve but not change the picture," he said. As far as he is concerned the project has reached maturity, and it is all over but the shouting, of which there is quite a lot.

The main controversy is with Don Johanson, a young American who rivals Leakey for his stunning discoveries. Johanson came out earlier this year with his book "Lucy," the story of how he unearthed the skeleton of a 3.5-million-year-old hominid. Johanson created a new species for this tiny creature that walked upright, calling it Australopithecus afarensis after the Afar triangle in Ethiopia where it was unearthed. He also claims that Lucy is the earliest known direct ancestor of man.

Leakey accepts the classification but not the conclusion. The difference of opinion, normal in this emerging science, does not let him. He is concerned by allegations in "Lucy" that he has failed to accept that some initial dating at Koobi Fora was incorrect.

claim and censure has taken a toll on Leakey, he masks it. His current disappointment, he says, is rooted in an inability to flesh out the riddles of evolution — why we acquired speech and a larger brain, how we learned to make tools or why the female hormonal cycle, unlike that of apes, makes woman always sexually receptive.

"If the room is totally dark and you can get a little light then you can see something. But to actually illuminate it once you've got some details, that is almost impossible," he said. "The answer to those four questions lies between 1 to 2 million years which is the period I've been working in. I don't think the information has been preserved. If we can't answer the questions there's a fault in theorizing and I tell you I have a right to be frustrated. I am but a man, you know."

Leakey's current working schedule is straining at the seams. His 12-to-14-hour day is filled with the obligations of being the administrative director of the National Museum of Kenya, as well as a string of business projects that he refuses to talk about, and a variety of books, television series and other enterprises.

Kidney Transplant He disregarded a kidney infection diagnosed in 1968 and when he collapsed in 1979, he was faced with eight-hour sessions on a dialysis machine three times a week or death. His brother Philip, Kenya's only white member of parliament, saved him by donating one of his kidneys.

Since his recovery, friends say, Leakey has mellowed. There are projects on the drawing boards in Nairobi, Kenya. Kinogo, the Koobi Fora project leader, this season traversed the opposite shore of Lake Turkana, which could harbor hominid fossils a million years older than the 1470 skull. Leakey is trying to secure funds for the project, which he hopes will begin in 1982 or 1983.

Does he ever worry that the jigsaw puzzle he is digging up may never be completed? "It would be nice to have the answers, but I don't think anyone worries about it." Then, to underline the new laid-back Leakey, he added, "I don't get uptight at all, actually."

PEOPLE: Burton Is Recovering From Ulcer Surgery

Actor Richard Burton is recovering "satisfactorily" from emergency surgery to repair a duodenal ulcer, according to a spokeswoman at St. John's Hospital in Santa Monica, Calif. Burton, who was admitted to the hospital Thursday night and underwent surgery early Friday, has "no post-operative complications," said his doctor. It was not known when the Welsh actor, who will be 56 next month, will be released. The hospitalization is the second for Burton this year. In March he was forced to quit the Los Angeles production of "Camelot," in which he was starring, and was admitted to St. John's for a painful back ailment. Richard Harris took over the part of King Arthur for Burton.

Yeager broke the sound barrier in the Bell X-1 at more than 670 miles an hour. He eventually achieved a speed of more than 1,000 mph and an altitude of more than 70,000 feet in the X-1. Others inducted were astronauts Alan Shepard, Scott Carpenter, Gordon Cooper and Walter Schirra. Virgil Grissom, the United States' second man into space, was inducted posthumously. He and two other astronauts died in a launch pad fire in the Apollo-1 capsule in January, 1967. A 19th-century Danish rocket pioneer, Andreas Anton Frederik Schumacher, also was inducted. He developed a rocket system after the bombardment of Copenhagen in 1857.

Victor Borge has been knighted for the fourth time. The composer-pianist already has been knighted by his native Denmark, as well as by Sweden and Norway. Now neighboring Finland has joined the act. Finnish Consul General Erik Heinrichs knighted Borge into the order of the White Rose for his significant and lasting contributions to U.S.-Finnish relations. Borge, reflecting on this honor was pleased. Now, he says, he finally has enough knights for two week-ends.

Stage and screen star Maximilian Schell has been nominated as director of Munich's Volkstheater. Schell, 51, told reporters after the announcement that he intended to help the theater lay to a "grass roots" public. The actor, who lives in the Bavarian capital, won an Oscar in 1971 for his portrayal of an attorney in "Judgment at Nuremberg." His nomination must be approved by the city's cultural committee.

Battered by heavy snow and an avalanche, seven members of a climbing team from Czechoslovakia scaled the 25,792-foot Nanda Devi peak, the team leader said. Kili Manabas, leader of the 11-member expedition, said five climbers scaled the summit in the Indian Himalayas Sept. 16 and two others made it to the top three days later.

A federal judge in New York ruled that the recent Broadway show "A Day in Hollywood/A Night in the Ukraine" was an "unauthorized appropriation" of characters created by the Marx Brothers. Heirs of the Marx Brothers had filed a suit contending that the show appropriated "their rights of publicity in the names and lik-nesses of Groucho, Harpo and Chico Marx. Judge William C. Conner, who issued the decision in Federal District Court in Manhattan, noted that the show included "performers simulating the unique appearance, style and mannerisms of the Marx Brothers." He was referring to the "Ukraine" half of the show, in which three performers enact a Marx Brothers-like farce dressed as the characters that the Marx Brothers played. A lawyer for the plaintiffs said the decision would not bar future performances of the show but would require a court hearing to determine the damages to be paid to the Marx heirs.
